

Basic Detail Report

The Wren Building, William and Mary College, Williamsburg, Va.

Date

1935

Primary Maker

Stanley Roy Badmin

Medium

Watercolor on paper

Description

This watercolor shows a dirt path running between an avenue of tall trees, their crowns covering up the sky. Light shines through the branches casting shadows on the ground. The path leads to a large colonial-style brick building topped, in the middle, with a wooden cupola. There is a clock on the cupola and a weathervane on top. One of the double doors at the center of the building is open. There are several people in this image, including one descending the stairs in front of the doorway, several looking at a white statue on the path, others walking down the path away from the building, and a man at left taking a photograph. To the left of the path stands a small cannon.

Dimensions

Object size: 7 3/4 × 9 inches